The correct sentence is “Do you know where she is?”. Here’s why: Questions (interrogative sentences) are centered on one verb (even if it’s just a form of “be”), and only that verb trades places with (comes before instead of after) the corresponding noun/pronoun. The question above is centered on the verb “know”, not “is”. So, technically, that question just asks whether one KNOWS where she is, rather than where she actually is (even though it typically implies wanting to ...
