The Lost Dog Michelle De

So onto THE LOST DOG by Michelle de Krester. This tells the story of a man who loses his dog. He is in the middle of some kind of half hearted love affair, and we cut back and forth between the love affair and the hunt for the dog. This is one literary-ass book. It is so literature I kind of want to barf a bit. It was full of images.

Michelle de Kretser writes and sounds like a poet. The short pithy perfectly constructed lines in The Lost Dog, have great appeal. The opening two lines completely set the story up; not many books have ever achieved this. The book is worth buying for those two lines alone.

The dog was standing still, one forepaw raised, listening. Tea-colored puddles sprawled on the track. A cockatoo flying up from a sapling dislodged a rhinestone spray.

The Lost Dog - Michelle de Kretser - First Chapter - The ...

I left Michelle de Kretser’s novel The Lost Dog for near the end of my Booker Prize longlist reading, as I’d been warned by others that it was a pretty knotty read, particularly at the beginning. The other features which distinguish it - how nice it is to try to form an opinion on a book before reading it - are that it’s the fifth book of the thirteen-strong longlist which is set wholly or partly in the Indian subcontinent (“The judges are pleased with the geographical balance of ...

Things progress rapidly, with a few unexpected turns thrown in as Tom and Nelly get together, the murky circumstances surrounding Felix’s disappearance are (somewhat) cleared up and the matter of the missing dog is settled. De Kretser’s unadorned, direct sentences illustrate her characters’ flaws and desires, and she does an admirable job of illuminating how life and art overlap in the 21 st century., Michelle de Kretser’s The Hamilton Case ratifies every dream one might have of a tropical ...

De Kretser’s sharp-witted new novel, The Lost Dog, retains an interest in the cross-cultural identities of its characters, but casts its thematic net far wider. It is a book about the hydra of modernity itself, although its narrative is simple and, in some respects, earthy.

The Lost Dog

The Lost Dog, by Michelle de Kretser. The Lost Dog by Michelle de Kretser was a big disappointment. This is one I was looking forward to because I loved The Hamilton Caseand The Rose Grower, and it’s been nominated for many prestigious awards, but TLD was, frankly, a plod to get through. It’s about a man called Tom who’s lost his dog in the bush. This is a bit harrowing for a dog lover because de Kretser keeps reminding us that it’s on a leash and so is likely to have strangled itself.
