The Museum at Purgatory : A Wondrous Strange Tale from the ...

Nick Bantock's Museum at Purgatory is nothing short of postmodern lectio divina. Bantock, the left coast Canadian visualist and writer, who has achieved success all over the world with his singular Griffin and Sabine trilogy, undertakes in Museum at Purgatory to explain what happens when we die. His is a brave and noble attempt, for there is little in world literature about this process that is not either cloying or terrifying.

You would be in Nick Bantock's Purgatory: the afterlife's way-station. In The Museum at Purgatory, your guide and narrator is Non (pronounced like the French word for no). No, he is not a demon or even someone who jabs at you with a red-hot trident.

Review | The Museum at Purgatory

In my humble opinion, this is the best book written by Nick Bantock since the `Griffin & Sabine' trilogy. The 3-dimensional artifacts he created for each room in `The Museum at Purgatory' are absolutely stunning. This is an ingenious tale of what happens to artists and collectors in life after death.

The museum at Purgatory (Book, 1999) [WorldCat.org]

The Purgatory Museum in Rome There's a mysterious and creepy room in the back of the Santa Croce di Gesu in Rome. It's known as the Purgatory Museum, but it's more like a small room with a display case holding testimonies left by the departed to the living often accompanied by requests for Masses for the dead.
